Time to hit the reset button on your investment model?

Ahmed Lambat's insightful presentation on Roshgold's Review of Operations made for a compelling case for investment in the Roshgold Group.
Yes, economic growth has stalled, political instability has persisted, and a weak currency has had a profound impact on South Africans. The trend of moving money offshore into thriving tech stocks, vibrant cryptocurrencies, gold, and silver is now showing signs of abating, as valuations have risen to unsustainable levels.

Monies placed in high-yield savings and participation platforms are beginning to yield less as interest rate cycles shift amid economic policy easing to stimulate growth.
Roshgold has often been accused of adopting a prudent, conservative approach to its shareholders' funds and investments.
Indeed, the cycle has changed, and shareholders were reminded of just that!

- Property investment and diversification of the recent past have begun to reap benefits.
- The investments in businesses have also yielded growth in income and share values.
- The Roshmetals unit valuation benefits from the commodity boom.
- The continued upgrading and investment in maintaining the property portfolio have positively impacted the portfolio's property values.

- Roshgold's track record cannot be faulted with forty-one years of consistent shareholder returns.

- The Roshgold share price unit has increased, and the returns for the year ended 30 June 2025 are more than ten percent. A commendable achievement.

- The group's cash management allows the group to leverage itself for suitable investment aquisitions

Savvy investors will use this shift and change in the economic cycle to reallocate investment capital into a solid portfolio that delivers sound returns and long-term capital growth.

Roshgold continues to offer shareholders and their families the affordability and flexibility of a good and solid investment either with lump-sum amount and/or consistent and regular debit order investments.

Roshgold helps build wealth over the long-term and supports and encourages long-term participation and wealth building. It is not a speculative short-term play aiming for annual returns and longer-term capital growth.

Many of our shareholders opt to tailor their participation to suit their finances without having to be locked in, contractually bound without concern for quantum of the amount or frequency. They decide on their financial situation and appreciate the flexibility of investing in the Roshgold group. They also have the option to re-invest their returns or have it paid out.

Flexibility personified!

Whether you are starting small, investing periodically or making a once-off contribution, our team will guide you through options that align with your circumstances and goals.

Sometimes, hitting reset doesn't mean starting over.
It simply means returning to fundamentals that work and a investment vehicle that has delivered growth and returns over fourty-one years.
